Establishing an Effective Team

SUMMARY

Establishing a new team or renewing an existing one is the responsibility of everyone on the team. Effective teams are built on establishing a common vision, creating building blocks for communication and collaboration, identifying and planning for roadblocks, and establishing accountability.

CONTEXT

Rarely are great business accomplishments the work of just one individual. The problems you face in your organizations are usually too complex to be solved by any one person or discipline. When it comes down to it, the ultimate goal of any team is to solve problems and get things done, whether you are in a project team, a vertical team, or a cross functional team.

You may be creating a new team or establishing a more effective team from an existing group of people. Regardless, you are collectively responsible for the ultimate outcome.

At the completion of this module, participants will be able to:

- Incorporate a process for establishing an effective team
- Create a vision for the team
- Establish cohesive team dynamics
- Launch team accountability

"Groups help generate courage. Without a sounding board for outrageous ideas, without personal encouragement and perspective when we hit a roadblock, we'd all lose our way."
—Warren Bennis
